As firms continue to increase their reliance on third parties to deliver business critical processes the associated supply chains become more complex and vulnerable to significant events. During industry-wide cybersecurity, business continuity, or regulatory events, it is critical to quickly determine vendors’ operational resiliency and any loss of service or data.

What’s at risk?

Business continuity
An understanding of how your vendors might be impacted to ensure continuous service

Economic shock
Pressure due to cancelled contracts and vendors exposed to high risk countries requiring a revisit of vendor financial health ratings

Access to critical goods and services
Limited availability of critical vendor infrastructures, stock levels, staffing, and fourth party dependencies

Security of corporate and customer data
The protection of data is not only mandated by global regulators but is critical to ensuring operational resiliency and reputation

Operations and controls
Existing operations and working environments may fundamentally change which impacts office locations and physical security parameters
