

Materials & Lightweighting Service

To comply with emissions targets, OEMs must consider all options, including new materials that reduce vehicle mass. Additionally, OEMs and suppliers need to examine new construction materials and techniques to reduce costs, ensure greater cradle-to-grave sustainability, and support innovative design features.

IHS Markit's Materials and Lightweighting Service provides insight, context, data, and analytics for the key technologies that are reshaping the materials used in car and components production.

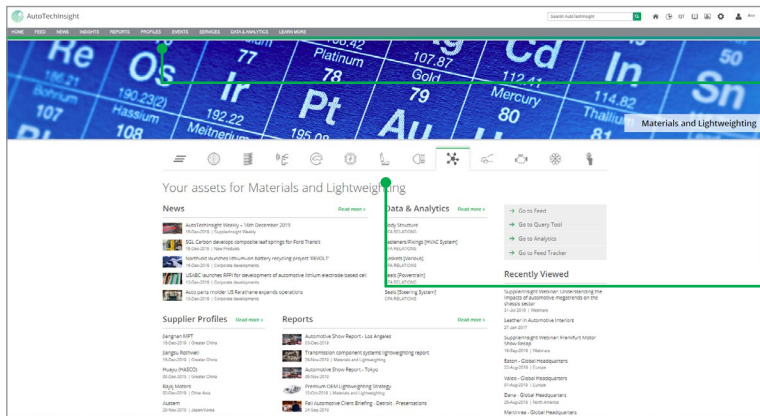

Topics covered:

Planners and strategists use the service to

- Assess the evolution of materials used in a vehicle's architecture
- Analyze how the competition is advancing weight reduction strategies
- Get an assessment of what has succeeded
- Understand OEMs' purchasing strategies
