Covid-19: Indian lockdown to delay chilli harvest

Chinese paprika planting is going slowly

India’s confinement is slowing human movements and chilli harvesting, with around half of crop remaining uncollected.

Traditionally, Indian harvesting starts in February but delayed planting due to unfavourable weather led to this critical situation, Olam Spices explained in its latest market report.

US conventional chilli plantings have started in New Mexico, Texas and Arizona. Meanwhile the organic is almost completed.

The 2020 Chinese paprika harvest is strict, planting activity slowing as transport communications between Xinjiang, the main origin, and Shandong, where most processors are, is still limited because restrictions due to Covid-19 are not completely eliminated yet.

Peru

Unseasonal heavy rainfall may dominate Peruvian paprika output volume and quality in southern regions.

Olam explained that lockdowns to avoid Covid-19 spread is leading to some supply chain disruptions. As a result, the 2021 harvest will be a key factor to launch new prices and negotiations with importers.
