- We expect Nigeria's economy to gradually recover; however, constraints on nonoil growth will linger, while the crude oil and gas sector's performance remains highly susceptible to volatile global prices plus production disruptions via renewed militant attacks on key hydrocarbon infrastructure.
- Annual consumer price inflation stays in double-digit territory, buoyed by several factors including continued exchange rate pass-through from import prices and elevated food, domestic energy, and production costs.
- Naira weakness vis-à-vis major trading partners continues as foreign exchange shortages prevail and the central bank continues its tight management of hard currency. The gap between the official and parallel market rates for the naira/US dollar persists.
- The government's fiscal stimulus plans will keep budget deficit targets above historical lows; however, several constraints undermine budget execution. Public debt levels are projected to increase but will stay

- President Assad is winning the civil war and remains committed to re-establishing control over all of Syria, backed by Russia and Iran. The US is likely to compromise over Assad's future, lacking a viable alternative. Territory captured by Kurdish forces in northeastern Syria is likely to be returned to government control in 2019. Turkish military support for the opposition in northwestern Syria will require a political settlement to end the civil war.
- The Islamic State's 'caliphate' has been eliminated, but the group retains sufficient intelligence penetration and capability to conduct sophisticated IED attacks in much of Syria, particularly along the Euphrates and Khabur rivers, and in the Suwayda desert. Separately, Al-Qaeda affiliate Hay'a Tahrir al-Sham occasionally targets government, civilian, and strategic assets in government-held areas with VBIEDs.
- The security situation at Damascus International Airport has improved significantly over the past 12
